

Elearning Tools and Processes: An Introduction for the Bewildered Novice

Presented by Jeff Harris, Chief Consultant

Additional Resources for eLearning Tools and Processes

www.tmreview.com

Training Media Review (TMR) is the “Consumer Reports” of a wide range of training products including elearning software solutions such as learning management systems and authoring tools. Because TMR is independent, it is able to provide unbiased evaluations performed by industry professionals of elearning software. Some resources are fee paid.

www.elearningguild.com

The eLearning Guild is comprised of over 30,000 elearning practitioners who as members share information, collaborate on research, meet at semi-annual conferences, and work cooperatively to improve the quality of elearning. Access to some Guild resources requires a paid membership.

www.astd.org

You’re obviously familiar with ASTD, but you might not know that the national association offers memberships with elearning-specific newsletters and resources.

www.elearninglearning.com

The Elearning Learning website describes itself as “A community collecting and organizing the best information on the web about eLearning.” It’s a good site to “nose around” and become more familiar with elearning tools and processes.

www.elearnspace.org

Jay Cross, a long time guru of elearning offers a variety of basic information at this website. Some of it may appear old, but most of it remains as relevant today as when it was originally posted.
